

Paving the Way

to formal education

Paving the Way aims to help youths into formal education and/or the labor market. A high degree of European youths in NEET make it clear that a large group of young people need to learn in another way. The Erasmus+ Strategic Partnership-supported project will help qualify work in the non-formal sector by developing a catalogue of ways and references on how we document and assess the youth's obtained competences. Actors in non-formal practice-based education can use this in their work and development with learners, who find what they want to do through „learning by doing“.

The six partners take up different positions in the spectra of non-formal to formal learning. The schools/institutions work with documentation and assessment of obtained competences, which make it possible for practice-based schools and institutions to act as bridges to the labor market either directly or through formal education.

Catalogue: The partners will each unfold their ways of documenting and assessing their learners. This is described in a catalogue targeting schools/institutions/organizations working or interested in starting working with non-formal learning in a practice-based environment.

Article: The partnership will write an article on why we document and assess in practice-based learning targeting policy- and opinion- makers.
